3. EXAMPLES OF SIMILAR TECHNOLOGIES

Tracking of users' online browsing can also be carried out with technologies similar to cookies. Here are some examples.

Localstorage: it is a technology used to optimize browsing, which does not collect data on the preferences expressed by the user (p.es. stores a code that identifies the user's session after login, to avoid the user having to enter username and password on each profile page when accessing restricted areas.

Tracking pixel: "Tracking code" or "tracking code", is precisely a small portion of code that is released by some systems with the aim of being implemented in others to track some data relating to the user and his browsing session or opening of e-mails, in a totally transparent way to the user himself. The data that are tracked can be the most diverse, such as the day and time, the geographical location, the type of device adopted for navigation, up to the most complex tracking pixels to monitor the value spent on a purchase order and other useful information for the marketing departments of the companies that use them.

Plugin: it is a program that interacts with another program to expand or extend its original functionality. The most commonly used plugins are those of social networks, which allow p.es. the user to follow a page or a social profile with a click, to indicate with a click that he has liked a web content and to share it on his social network profile, etc.

Widget: is a graphical user interface component of a program, which is intended to facilitate the user to interact with the program itself. The most commonly used widgets are those of social networks, which allow users to easily open social networks in a separate browser window.

These services allow you to interact with social networks, or other external platforms, directly from the pages of a site. Any interactions and information acquired by the site are subject to the privacy settings of the third party that created the aforementioned technologies. To receive detailed information pursuant to art. 13 of the Personal Data Protection Law, regarding the use of personal data processed when you use these technologies, we invite you to visit the websites of the third party managers of the aforementioned technologies
